WHY PLANET OF THE APES?

"Beware the beast Man, for he is the Devil's pawn. Alone among God's primates, he kills for sport or lust or greed. Yea, he will murder his brother to possess his brother's land. Let him not breed in great numbers, for he will make a desert of his home and yours. Shun him; drive him back into his jungle lair, for he is the harbinger of death."

Why did these movies have such an effect on my generation? When Roddy McDowall, as the Ape archaeologist "Cornelius," read those words from the sacred scrolls, he was perfectly describing the fears that existed in our late 1960's world. Would the U.S. or Russia "push the button?" Would our generation be the last generation?

You see, aside from the amazing Ape make-ups, the 20th Century Fox APES movies, like all good science fiction, were actually about something. PLANET was about the violence and arrogance of humankind, a warning about how we could destroy ourselves. BENEATH showed how the more "civilized" the Apes became, the more they duplicated the earlier mistakes of man. ESCAPE showed us a preview of the Pop Culture hero worship that we now see on a daily basis with the Kardashians. CONQUEST gave us a parable for the evils of slavery, and BATTLE gave us hope that the future could be rewritten to include peaceful co-existence.

Remember that this was before the current spate of Lord of the Rings and Comic book movies with their many sequels and reboots. In the early 1970s, POTA was the only ongoing series of sci-fi/fantasy films we had. LOGAN'S RUN, SOYLENT GREEN, ZPG, THE ANDROMEDA STRAIN – were all one shot wonders. But PLANET OF THE APES spawned not only four sequels, but cranked one out every year – then followed up the last movie with a TV series!

That's an unending stream of Apes from 1968 to 1975! The APES films took me from Elementary School into the end of Junior High School, with a cultural saturation that included the first attempt at real studio merchandising. POTA was one of the first movie series to have licensed Don Post latex masks (real and sculpted hair versions) available. There were eight-inch MEGO action figures, Addar plastic models, trash cans, and posters and tie-in novelizations. POTA was STAR WARS before there was STAR WARS.

And so for Apes fans, this auction presents a rare opportunity to take home a piece of our childhood. From French language 3-sheet posters to screen used complete gorilla soldier costumes. A chance to own original production art, like actual design drawings from Academy Award nominated costume designer Morton Haack, or the make-up kit and appliance molds used by Academy Award winner John Chambers. This is our chance to own a piece of Apes history.

And not just the Apes of my childhood, for now a new generation has their APES, with the 2011 release of RISE OF THE PLANET OF THE APES and this Summer's DAWN OF THE PLANET OF THE APES. These new films were spawned in a different political climate than the first series, speaking to an "occupy" audience more aware of animal experimentation and environmental issues than fear of nuclear war. John Chambers' ground-breaking latex make-ups have been replaced by motion capture CGI, but will these new Apes characters capture our imaginations as the first films did?

Only the future will tell.

5. VINTAGE BENEATH THE PLANET OF THE APES PROMOTIONAL THE APE/ THE MUTANT NEWSPAPER. Created by New York-based Harry K. McWilliams Associates, these promotional newspapers were first distributed to the audience attending the Planet of the Apes movie in 1968—many years before the franchise was to be hugely exploited by merchandising opportunities in the mid-1970s. While "The Ape" was intended purely as a light-hearted and sometimes comedic take on the events in the movie, it (and it's successors) assumed added significance among Apes fans because of some of the names and facts invented by the writers, which have contributed to the mythos of the series. The same company repeated the publicity stunt for all of the movie's sequels, slightly altering the name each time, but keeping the terrific attention to the details of the movies. This 4-page issue accompanied the release of Beneath the Planet of the Apes and features dual headlines. From the front, The Ape News headline reads: "Ape General Vows to Attack Humans." From the back, The Mutant News headline reads: "War With Apes Seems Imminent." The date is Friday, March 1, 3955 – reflecting the change from the previous movie. 13. ORIGINAL PRODUCTION OVERLAY ARTWORK FROM BENEATH THE PLANET OF THE APES BY JOHN CHAMBERS. Early concept design for the look of the Human Mutants in the 1970 sequel, Beneath the Planet of the Apes, depicting a male human face on a 12 ½" x 15 ½" sheet of acetate with a smaller 7 ½" x 8 ½" sheet of overlay depicting the same but disfigured face. The artwork is by John Chambers, who used an image of Martin Landau—likely a holdover from Chambers's work on Mission: Impossible. Or, it is entirely possible that Landau was considered to play the role of Mutant leader, Mendez XXVI. In any case, the artwork represents the very first Mutant concepts in Paul Dehn's earliest draft, Planet of the Apes Revisited, where Dehn had envisioned "a figure who looks like the Grand Inquisitor grotesquely lengthened by a distorting-mirror. The immensely tall, cadaverously lean body is topped by a head discernibly human, though the great aquiline nose suggests an eagle's beak. Even the long fingers are raptorially curved like claws. But the eagle seems blind. Where there should be eyes, there is facial flesh. Then a curious thing happens. Mendez says: 'Let me look at you' and turns slowly into profile to reveal that his eyes are at the sides of his face and not in front. He can, like a great bird, look outwards but not forwards." Ultimately this concept was discarded in favor of other designs. But a fantastic artifact nonetheless. In fine condition. STARTING AT $1,000
