PLANET OF THE APES

Special: Science fiction with a satirical sting.

Charlton Heston plays an astronaut who has crash-landed on a planet where men are mute savages—despised, preyed upon and enslaved by a race of civilized apes.

The fun of the film lies in some of the dialogue ("Remember," a friendly simian tells Heston, "all humans look alike to most apes."); the action sequences; and familiar faces—Roddy McDowall, Kim Hunter, Maurice Evans, James Whitmore and James Daly—in monkey make-up that won a special Oscar.

Rod Serling and Michael Wilson adapted the script from a novel by Pierre Boulle ("Monkey Planet"). Franklin J. Schaffner ("Patton") directed the 1968 film, which has spawned four sequels.

Cast . . . George Taylor: Charlton Heston. Cornelius: Roddy McDowall. Zira: Kim Hunter. Dr. Zaius: Maurice Evans. Nova: Linda Harrison. Assembly President: James Whitmore. Honorious: James Daly. Landon: Robert Gunner. Dodge: Jeff Burton. (2 hrs., 30 min.)

Planet of the Apes

The incredibilities of Planet of the Apes, the 1968 version of Pierre Boulle's novel that spawned four cinematic sequels, make it good science-fiction fun for 15-year-olds of all ages. In plot, in case you've forgotten, it's a kind of reverse "King Kong": Charlton Heston is a human Kong and nearly everyone else is an ape. As one wit remarked, any movie that has Roddy McDowall and Maurice Evans running around in monkey suits for the duration can't be all bad. It would, of course, have been a bit better with a little less catering to a subteen fondness for monkey jokes and a bit of subtlety and/or sophistication about its "message for our time."

This Week's Best Bets

FRIDAY. Traditionally a programming washout, this fall Friday has some lively entries. Redd Foxx returns to work in a funny Sanford and Son (NBC at 8). CBS competes with Redd by releasing into the atmosphere Planet of the Apes, a mutant from the popular science fiction feature films. The opener is a silly business saved largely by Roddy McDowall's delightful portrayal of Galen, a curious, ingratiating chimp on the run with two astronauts. (CBS at 8).
